

The Future is OPEN

Statistical Thinking for the 21st
Century

STATISTICAL THINKING FOR THE 21ST CENTURY

Statistical thinking is a way of understanding a complex world by describing it in relatively simple terms that nonetheless capture essential aspects of its structure, and that also provide us some idea of how uncertain we are about our knowledge. The foundations of statistical thinking come primarily from mathematics and statistics, but also from computer science, psychology, and other fields of study.

Russell A. Poldrack

Russell A. Poldrack
Stanford University

